U.S. Airforce EOD Team

Explosive Ordnance disposal technicians perform one of the most dangerous missions in the military and have adapted their equipment and technology to meet the ever changing tactics of their adversaries.

EOD jobs in the Air Force have claimed the lives of 20 technicians since 2006 alone. Since the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan kicked off in the early 2000s, the danger has increased. Now, instead of taking care of unexploded ordnance found on bases or blowing up a building, EOD technicians are in combat zones scouring the desert and terrain for their new enemy: improvised explosive devices. Once a rarely-heard acronym, IED is now a household name and no group is more familiar with the term than EOD technicians.

Come to Bell Library and Hear about what this specialized job is all about.
